

Why creativity matters for fresh graduates

WEDNESDAY DECEMBER 18 2019

Graduands at St. Elizabeth's institute of health professionals in Mukono. PHOTO BY JESSICA SABANO

ADVERTISEMENT

By Jessica Sabano

Graduands at St. Elizabeth's institute of health and professionals Mukono were on Tuesday advised to stick to professionalism during their works.

While officiating the third graduation ceremony at their main campus at Ssaza Mukono, Dr Patrick Mpiima Kibirango, the registrar Uganda Allied Professionals' Council said graduands should emphasise professionalism to help them serve and achieve in this country.

"You need to be creative. People are looking at employees who add value to their works," Dr Mpiima said.

Dr Mpiima said they should always upgrade and stop looking in one direction.

"Look at bigger opportunities and go for higher education in anaesthesia and pharmacy where you can make good money," he said.

He said few medical officers are in for anaesthesia and advised them to go for such courses where supply is low amid high market demand.

The Director of the institute, Paul Ssebagala said 300 students graduated in different disciplines including Diploma in medical laboratory technology, Diploma in pharmacy, certificate in clinical medicine and community health and others.

He advised them to put God first in whatever they do to help them perform better.